

REPLACED OR RESKILLED?

Edition 23

Change Management
In Organizations

Looking ahead to the next three years, respondents predict that the adoption of AI will reshape many roles in the workforce. Generally, they expect more employees to be reskilled than to be separated. Nearly four in ten respondents reporting AI adoption expect more than 20 percent of their companies' workforces will be reskilled, whereas 8 percent of respondents say the size of their workforces will decrease by more than 20 percent.

“As someone who works with Education Institutions as well as with the next generation, I'm also excited about what this will mean for our youth. I believe AI will help usher in necessary shifts in the education system, e.g. less memorization and set education pathways... and more exploration-driven innovative education systems that don't encourage conformity in the first place. And, in a world where our children don't spend 15 years learning to suppress their uniqueness, we get to reap the benefits of their natural wisdom, the wisdom we suppressed in ourselves and have to work much harder to uncover.”
